

How to write a position paper

The deadline for the Position Papers is 24th of April and they must be submitted to your chairs

1. What is a 'position paper'?

The position paper is a summary of the stance that one country adopts on the topic tackled by the committee. It reflects both the main aspects of the topic and the point of view of the represented country (the involvement in the matter). It helps the delegate to become a well-prepared participant, with a deep insight into the affected issue.

It is necessary to do wide research on the topic in order to write a summary, so it requires delegates to spend time getting to familiarize themselves with the topic, even if they have a complete and complex solution to the problem from the very beginning.

2. What should it contain?

Generally, a position paper answers 4 questions:

- What are the different aspects of the problem?
- What has already been done to solve the problem?
- How much is your country involved? What is your country's standpoint?
- What can be a possible solution?

3. How to find the necessary information in order to answer the question?

First and foremost, an important document that is provided by every MUN Conference is the Research Report—this is an in-depth analysis that presents the topic from an objective point of view (what caused the issue in the first place, who the main actors are, what the United Nations has done on the matter etc.). This is a great starting point for all delegates; however, as the Research Report is given to all members of the committee, it is necessary for each participant to also conduct their own research.

If you wish to become a "Best Delegate" nominee, you have to know your country in general. History is one of the key aspects, as you will need to know what relations your country has with the other members of the committee in order to form alliances. The World Factbook is one of the best sources you will track down on the internet. This is where you may find any necessary information on a specific country (history, economy, military capacities, etc.). It can also be helpful to search for information on your country's Embassy website.

Be careful while using less-trustworthy sources. If you chose to use Wikipedia, use as guidance only the sources cited in the footnotes (at the bottom of the page). Avoid taking direct information straight from Wikipedia articles, as that is not necessarily verified or up-to-date.

Here are some useful pages to research your topic:

www.un.org

www.globalpolicy.org

Usually, you may find interesting articles about any kind of global issue in the world press. You should definitely try to check BBC or CNN. Your specific committee probably has some other world press (e.g., The Financial Times/The Economist for ECOFIN/ECOSOC).

Be smart when choosing your sources. You don't necessarily have to use 30 different websites, as long as you know that your information is accurate, and that you have a truly profound understanding of your country's policy.

4. International steps taken toward solving the given issue:

In order to learn whether solutions were implemented in the past regarding your topic, you can search on the UN Digital Library for previous resolutions (you will most likely find an overwhelming number, but feel free to only use what you find essential). International frameworks, agreements, or treaties are also perfect in this context.

5. Country's point of view

There are two different options: your country is either involved directly or indirectly. If your country is directly involved, you can easily find its official point of view. In the case of indirect involvement, careful research on the different aforementioned websites will most likely be necessary, so make sure to check out the allies and enemies of your country and their involvement.

6. What should it look like?

Officially, it is a formal document with formal language. It can be helpful if you have to deliver a speech and you are a bit unprepared at that very moment, but it also provides the chairs with an insight of your preparation before the conference officially begins.

Position papers should be (at minimum) 1-2 pages per topic and should be in separated documents for each topic:

Alignment: Justified

Line spacing: 1,5

Font: Times New Roman.

Font size: 12

They should be named as such: PP_COUNTRY_TOPIC NAME_COMMITTEE_MUNOB2026

Please be aware that plagiarism in any form within position papers will not be accepted. "Plagiarism" refers to using ideas, text, or materials from another source without giving proper credit. This includes copying content directly as well as rephrasing it without citing the original source. Additionally, the use of AI-generated content is strictly prohibited. We have effective methods to identify such misconduct, and any confirmed cases of plagiarism or AI use will be reported to the appropriate professors and the delegate found guilty of such violations shall receive a diplomatic warning (Rules of Procedure Article II. I. 8).

A proper bibliography should be added at the end of each Position Paper. It should contain the links to all the web-sites used or the proper citation to any source used.

Position Paper sample

Body:	Human Rights Council
Issue concerning to:	Combating the Human Rights Violations by Terrorist Groups, With Special Regards to Boko Haram
Represented country:	Democratic People's Republic of Korea
Delegate's name:

Millions of people lose their lives every year due to attacks by terrorist groups around the world. Countless war crimes are committed, and, unfortunately, the innocent have to bear the consequences of a conflict they didn't even want. In these troubling times, we must join forces and stop terrorist groups from acting in order to protect our citizens and the country.

Boko Haram is one of the largest terrorist groups in the world, founded in 2002 by Mohammed Yusuf, in Nigeria. It aims to convert as many people as possible to the religion of Islam. The followers of Boko Haram are known for their cruelty towards anyone who does not share the same religion as them. Over the years they have committed countless crimes, and approximately 40,000 people have been killed because of them. In 2015, Boko Haram decided to ally with ISIS, another terrorist group from the Middle East, and the new group is called "Islamic State in West Africa Province" ("ISWAP").

On the 14th of April, in 2014 Boko Haram abducts 276 female students from a school, leading to global media attention through the "Bring Back Our Girls" campaign. Most of the girls escaped or were released, but more than 100 are still missing.

We are afraid that if we do not take action to stop the Boko Haram group as soon as possible, the attacks will become more and more frequent and will have devastating consequences, which would result in the loss of more human lives, but also environmental damage due to the weapons used.

The Democratic People's Republic of Korea has been actively involved in maintaining the safety and integrity of its citizens.

We have always been concerned about our citizens' safety, and we did our best to offer them a free and peaceful country to live in. The human's right to life, liberty and physical integrity of individuals are key ideas for the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, since its establishment in 1948, by our beloved and Eternal President, Kim Il Sung.

From the point of view of the DPRK, the Boko Haram terrorist group is harmful to those around it, because it burdens many human rights, such as the human right to be free, the human right to benefit from equality, regardless of the religion one has, and the right to life.

Since the emergence of the terrorist group Boko Haram, we have been very concerned about the safety of citizens near the group's area of operation, and we expressed our support, for those in need.

The Democratic People's Republic of Korea (DPRK) has expressed its willingness to assist the Nigerian Armed Forces in tackling Boko Haram attacks in the Northeast.

We are with Nigeria in these times troubled by terrorist groups, and we express our support by sending funds for the needs of the state. We promote the sending of aid of any kind, because we must fight hard for the injustices created by Boko Haram to stop.

In these difficult times, the relationship between Nigeria and the DPRK has only become closer.

In order to stop Boko Haram, we must express our willingness to create an international fund in which each country would invest a certain amount of money, according to its income. In this way, we will have the opportunity to invest in high-performance military equipment, which will provide more security to the people in the affected regions, but also resources such as food and water for the victims who managed to escape from the terrorist group, considering that we do not have the certainty that they benefited from enough food and water.

Also, it is necessary to strengthen the security at the border to prevent the spread of the terrorist group to other territories. At the same time, by creating a stronger border, we can find their location much easier, thus increasing the chances of stopping them.

The fight against terrorism is one of many difficulties, but if we join forces and stay united, we will be able to live in a free world, where we can choose to believe in anything we want and not fear the consequences.
