Debate Erupts in Security Council Over Peacekeeping Training and Humanitarian Funding

Today, the Security Council took up on the proposal of peacekeeping troops' training in the region of Sudan and South Sudan, as the delegate of Malta expressed their concern regarding the people that could potentially be implicated in the military preparations.

Russia was outraged by the meaninglessness of this amendment, as they stated it is a waste of time for the Security Council. Following this, Japan brought up their distress regarding the location of the trainings, as they pointed out the unnecessary of the implication of the Security Council in this matter. This stance sparked some questions towards Japan, which implied in the eyes of some delegates, that they should send undertrained peacekeeping troops in the region of Sudan and South Sudan. The Russian Federation was truly disappointed of the way the Security Council is tackling this issue, as they firmly stated that it doesn't facilitate the needs of the region.

As for being against this amendment, the delegation of Ecuador stated that limiting the troops of gaining equipment and more training will only facilitate the effectiveness, empathizing the already existing funds that could be used. Switzerland has voiced its support for a proposed fund aimed at financing various training programs. However, they assert that the fund should not extend to humanitarian projects in the Sudan and South Sudan region.

According to Switzerland, humanitarian aid should be the responsibility of the affected region itself, as they question the effectiveness of allocating funds through a resolution from the Security Council. They argue that it would be more prudent to entrust such initiatives to organizations with expertise in humanitarian work.

Algeria has proposed striking out an operative clause, prompting discussion on the need for an economic fund, as the United States emphasizes the importance of financial resources. Algeria counters by pointing out the existence of institutions already funding the United Nations, suggesting that additional funds may be unnecessary.

However, the US contends that the current fund is inadequate, citing the African Union's successful peace initiatives as an example of effective financing. Russia questions the necessity of a new fund, highlighting concerns about administrative oversight. The US acknowledges these concerns and expresses willingness to address them furthermore.

Nuclear Usage and Safety Empathized in SPECPOL

Within the SPECPOL committee, the topic of developing strategies to ensure safety in relation to the increasing usage of nuclear energy was discussed today. During their opening speech, the delegate of Pakistan accused Russia of incompetence with regards to their inability to impose safety procedures for their nuclear reactors. In response to this, the delegation of the Russian Federation issued a right of reply taking offense to the former delegate's bold claims and denying them entirely. Despite this, Russia's right of reply was not granted.

Following this, The United States put forward a resolution addressing nuclear energy usage, aiming to ensure its peaceful and beneficial application for all. This stance gathered support from Russia, which emphasized the importance of a safer, cleaner, and more sustainable future.

Switzerland also resonated with this sentiment, advocating for private investments in nuclear energy and emphasizing the need for safer cybersecurity measures. On the other hand, Iran expressed concerns about potential political implications if nuclear resources were utilized, highlighting the importance of cybersecurity in safeguarding nuclear facilities from cyber attacks. Russia engaged in discussions with Iran about cybersecurity measures and incidents of cyber attacks on nuclear reactors, underscoring the necessity of enhancing security protocols while adapting to evolving threats.

Moreover, delegates discussed nuclear power as a crucial component of future energy solutions, arguing that it would contribute to society's advancement. Pakistan introduced an amendment focused on coolant management in nuclear reactors to prevent core meltdowns during natural disasters, which gained much support among delegates.

Throughout the discussions, cybersecurity emerged as a key concern, with delegates emphasizing the importance of preventing leaks and ensuring the integrity of nuclear facilities.

UNODC Continues Discussion on Curbing Mercenary Groups in Africa

Canada has presented a resolution aimed at protecting civilians from unwarned strikes during times of war. They stress that this resolution not only strengthens international relations but also safeguards civilians from harm. The United States voiced full support for Canada's resolution, viewing it as a collaborative effort that would represent all nations.

Questions arose regarding the funding of this initiative by the International Monetary Fund (IMF), with concerns raised about its potential impact on other countries' economies. Israel's delegate pressed the matter further, arguing that while the initiative promotes economic growth, it should not infringe upon any rights.

Syria highlighted the issue of terrorist organizations acquiring ammunition and emphasized the importance of stricter regulations for countries supplying such weapons. The United States echoed this sentiment, suggesting that countries with significant casualties resulting from loose munitions should face sanctions for potentially violating international law and security.

Iran expressed reservations about the amendment's lack of detail and proposed additional measures to address decision-making processes related to ammunition distribution.

They questioned whether countries at war would truly prioritize minimizing casualties, suggesting that financial repercussions might incentivize compliance.

CSW Committee Addresses Women's Protection Amid Religious Persecution in the Middle East

The committee of CSW focused on discussing the topic related to taking measures to protect women in the middle east from religious persecution.

The Republic of Korea gave an opening speech, stating that although about 50% of their population does not claim to have a religion, they still advocate for religious freedom in other countries, adding that they are open to solutions that do not involve violence and expressing the eagerness to cooperate with other nations in order to deal with this issue.

There were a few challenging questions for the delegate of ROK, such as South Korea's willingness to work with other countries considering the fact that they are unable to get along with their neighboring country, the DPRK, and put aside their differences in order to work together for a better future. To this, South Korea simply responded by stating they are willing to work with the DPRK, but are waiting for the other nation's opinion on the issue as well. Additionally, the Russian Federation also responded to South Korea's speech, asking them how they are able to advocate for religious freedom if in their own country confronted with such issues there have been cases where religion was forcefully introduced within the education system. The delegate of the Republic of Korea stated that they are aware of this fact and are working towards eliminating the issue.

Debate on Cultural Preservation Amidst Conflict: SOCHUM Confronts Allegations and Unexpected Incident

Today, in SOCHUM, the topic of discussion were referring to finding measures to combat discrimination towards cultural assets of countries that engage in armed conflict.

Among the opening speeches of various members of the committee, Russia's delegation also held a Q&A session in which they defended themselves from the accusation that the Russian Federation was destroying Ukraine's cultural heritage due to their constant attacks on the country because of their invasion.

In response to these allegations, the delegate of Russia stated that they have no fault in the conflict, because collateral damage is a normal occurrence during war and they have no means to prevent it, as they are also doing their best to protect their own nation.

Additionally, a right of reply was issued from the United States of America in response to the delegation of Laos' mentioning of operation Barrel Roll, during which the US dropped 260 million bombs on Laos's territory as part of an air campaign that took place during the Vietnam War that resulted in 350 thousand civilian deaths. Moreover, there was also a surprise abduction during today's lobbying time, in which the delegate of Laos was suddenly abducted from the committee room by a rogue soldier.

CTC Grapples with Hezbollah's Presence in Latin America: Divisions Emerge in Delegate Positions

The Counter Terrorism Committee gathered to address the escalating concerns surrounding Hezbollah's activities in Latin America. In an opening speech, the delegate of Turkiye firmly denounced Hezbollah as an enemy of the state, underscoring their stance against the group's actions in the region. Echoing similar sentiments, Afghanistan's delegate, despite not being directly embroiled in the issue, expressed solidarity with Turkiye and expressed their readiness to collaborate with other nations to seek solutions.

MUNOB 2024

However, achieving consensus proved challenging during lobbying sessions, with noticeable disparities between the Eastern and Western blocs. Notably, the Eastern bloc contained only five members, including Syria, whose delegation adamantly defended Hezbollah, citing the group's perceived importance as an ally to the nation.

HRC Discusses Division Over Africa Corruption Issue: Bloc Formation Sparks Dispute

In today's committee session, the HRC are discussing the issue of corruption on Africa's territory. After giving their opening speeches, the delegates entered lobbying time in order to start drafting a resolution for the topic. While in lobbying time, a dispute appeared among the delegates, since the majority of them wanted to form a single block, but the delegates of Iraq, Syria, DPRK, Iran and India opposed this and formed their own block instead. When asked about why they chose to separate themselves from the majority, the delegate of DPRK simply stated that they do not trust the delegate of the United States or anyone that allied themselves with them, even going as far as to say that they are downright evil and they wish to have nothing to do with their resolution. When asked about the situation, as well as DPRK'S response, the delegate of Israel retorted by saying that they do not trust the DPRK either and that they feel offended by their statement and their lack of cooperation with the other delegates.

Where is ECOFIN?

The ECOFIN committee might be the funniest committee in this edition of MUNOB, as they mostly have POEs and empathize with the wellbeing of their delegates by entertaining them, whilst creating a prompt resolution for the next day.

And... Crisis?

The Crisis committee is asked to explain and approach our journalists next time they talk about 5 topics at a time, but we can assure they had fun and fruitful discussions, as our press team captured many questionable photos from their committee.

THANKS

I wanted to mention some people without whom this newspaper wouldn't be possible. Special thanks and my biggest appreciation to my writers, Mihai and Ana, that helped me so much these days by writing and gathering ideas, putting them together and giving me a perfect summary of the discussions. Thank you so much for your efforts and willingness to participate in this project in your free time.

Further, I want to thank my formatter Deea, who had so much patience with me, my vision and moreover, for bringing it to life.

Deeply from my heart comes my gratitude for the photographers Sabina, Ana, Mara, Diana and Dan that captured moments from the conference and showed very much engagement in what they did.

I also want to thank my teachers for lifting up my spirits when I was so done with writing this and also huge respect for Stefy from the IT department and the Staff for publishing this newspaper.

Thank you for this opportunity,
Yours, Bea
